PROXY ADVISOR RECOMMENDS OFFICE DEPOT'S STOCKHOLDERS VOTE TO REJECT ALAN LEVAN'S AND HIS COMPANY WOODBRIDGE'S DISSIDENT NOMINEES

ISS Cites Concerns About Poor Performance of Levan's Companies and Lack of Qualifications of His Nominees

ISS Says Dissidents Have Not Proven That They Would Be Better Able Than Management to Effect Positive Changes*

ISS Recommends That Office Depot Stockholders Vote Office Depot's WHITE Proxy Card

Delray Beach, Fla., April 13, 2008 — Office Depot, Inc. (NYSE: ODP), a leading global provider of office products and services, reported today that Institutional Shareholder Services (ISS), an institutional proxy advisory service, recommends that Office Depot stockholders vote to reject the two dissident directors nominated by Alan Levan and his company Woodbridge at this year's Annual Meeting of Stockholders currently scheduled for April 23, 2008. ISS cited concerns about the poor performance of Levan's companies and the lack of qualifications of his nominees, and concluded that Levan and his nominees have not proven that they would be better able than Office Depot's management to effect positive changes at Office Depot.

ISS recommends that Office Depot stockholders vote only the WHITE proxy card and not vote any gold card they receive from Levan/Woodbridge. Office Depot welcomes ISS's support, and remains focused on executing a strong turnaround plan designed to increase value for all of Office Depot's stockholders.

However, Office Depot disagrees with ISS's determination that stockholders should withhold votes for members of the Board's Compensation Committee.

In recommending that Office Depot stockholders vote against Levan's two dissident nominees, Office Depot noted that ISS raised several concerns surrounding Levan, including that:

- All of the publicly traded companies where Levan is either CEO or Chairman have produced significant negative stockholder returns for the past 1-, 2- and 3- years;
- Levan is involved in the real estate and financial sectors, and has no experience involving companies in the retail industry or as an activist investor;
- Levan purchased only 200 shares of Office Depot prior to the record date for this year's Annual Meeting;
- Levan nominee Mark Begelman has not been in the office supplies business for over 12 years, is not independent from Alan Levan and has the potential to be "disruptive" in the boardroom; and
- Levan nominee Martin Hanaka's track record of poor share price performance during his tenure at other public companies "raises doubts about his ability to improve stockholder value as a CEO or a board member".*

Additionally, ISS noted that some Office Depot stockholders have raised concerns that, despite the fact that Levan has not called for removing our current CEO or any other changes in management, Levan would try to "wrestle" for control of management, particularly given that he has targeted for removal from the Office Depot Board both the current and former CEOs.

Separately, while Office Depot appreciates ISS's recommendation that stockholders should reject the dissident slate, Office Depot disagrees with ISS's determination that stockholders should withhold votes for members of the Board's Compensation Committee. The members of Office Depot's Compensation Committee are all highly qualified, independent directors (full biographies of each member follow), and the Company's compensation philosophy is clearly aligned with the corporate objective of creating long-term value for stockholders.

The Company noted that compensation programs for Office Depot senior executives are designed, in close collaboration with independent compensation experts, to enable the Company to recruit and retain senior executives who will help the Company achieve its short-term and long-term business objectives. Regarding long-term equity incentives, the Compensation Committee and the Board consider such incentives to be critical to the alignment of executive compensation with stockholder value creation. Office Depot believes that restricting the ability of the Compensation Committee to award long-term equity incentives to senior executives would severely impede the Company's ability to design appropriate compensation programs that closely align the interests of the Company's executives with those of its stockholders.

Regarding the special equity retention grant awarded our CEO in February 2007, which ISS cites in recommending stockholders withhold votes for Compensation Committee members, Office Depot notes the following:

- The equity grant was for retention and consisted solely of stock options with a five-year cliff vesting schedule;
 - The equity grant was based, in part, on Office Depot's outstanding performance from 2005 through the first half of 2007, during which the Company significantly outperformed its peers;
 - At the time of the equity grant, there was significant concern that, given high CEO turnover within the retail industry, our CEO would be recruited externally;

- Relying on our CEO's employment agreement to retain him, as ISS suggests, was insufficient as by its terms the agreement would terminate on March 11, 2008, and he could have terminated his employment at any time, subject to the terms and conditions of the agreement;
- None of the stock options awarded as part of the special equity retention grant have any current cash value;
- No cash value will be realized under this equity retention grant unless Office Depot's stock price exceeds $33.60; and
- One-half of the options awarded as part of the special equity retention grant require Office Depot's stock price to exceed $50 per share for value to be realized.

Given these factors, Office Depot's Compensation Committee and the entire Board continue to believe that the February 2007 retention grant was appropriate to retain Mr. Odland, and further believe that it provides significant incentive for Mr. Odland to build value for all of Office Depot stockholders.

The Company has a proven Board and management team in place who have historically created significant value for stockholders, and who have put in place a strong, long-range plan designed to address the new challenges facing the Company and create additional value for stockholders in the future.

Office Depot strongly recommends that its stockholders vote FOR each of the Company's directors on the WHITE proxy card. These votes should be submitted promptly as the Annual Meeting of Stockholders is currently scheduled for April 23, 2008. Stockholders who have questions regarding the annual meeting or need assistance in voting their shares should contact MacKenzie Partners, Inc. by calling toll-free (800) 322-2885.
